Old Houses in New Street, Worcester. Worcester is an ancient city, delightfully situated in an undulating plain on the east bank of the River Severn, sheltered by a well-wooded hill. Many fine old timbered houses remain in Friar Street and New Street, including King Charles's House, where he slept the night before the Battle of Worcester, 3rd September, 1651. Its staunch support of the Royal cause won for Worcester the title of "the Faithful City."
